ABSTRACT

Academic librarians provide many outreach services to promote the use of resources and create awareness of library services that benefit students and faculty. Through cooperative partnerships, academic libraries have the potential to play a crucial role in outreach activities that benefit non-traditional campus constituencies. Staff employees, especially those in need of basic literacy and digital literacy skills, are often an overlooked segment of the campus community. The purpose of this paper is to raise awareness and explore the implications for expanding Library and Information Science education to train librarians in creating collaborative library outreach services that support university staff employees in need of reading and digital literacy services.

LIBRARY AND INFORMATION SCIENCE EDUCATION AND ADULT LITERACY

Public libraries are one of the first places many adult learners think of when they are ready to reach out for help. We have come to see the public library as a location for all manner of services and the academic library, protected by ivory tower, as a sacred space that must only be used by those deemed worthy.

In this paper, we will…

HIDDEN COMMUNITIES

Academic libraries are adept in outreach and collaborative initiatives, serving multiple communities within the academy and their local communities. University and community outreach, when done well, establishes partnerships, creates awareness, and garners goodwill for the library. Understandably, outreach is a common mission of academic libraries (Edwards & Thorton, 2013) and vital to promoting the resources and services available to the community at large.
